

"I will review real-space renormalization group techniques for statistical lattice models. Even though Kadanoff and Wilson discussed them first around 1970, surprisingly there are no good systematically improvable algorithms for computing the renormalized Hamiltonian. I will then discuss how tensor networks and tensor renormalization group try to improve on this."